What Is Really Behind the Fires, And Can We See Through The Smokescreen Yet?

Two and a half weeks ago we had the devastating fire that destroyed a large part of the port city of Lahaina on the Hawaiian island of Maui. Then last week we had both the evacuation of Yellowknife and the destruction of much of West Kelowna, part of the third largest city in British Columbia, which was ravaged by fire. And all this on the back of the pre-election fires in Alberta in May, followed by the Quebec fires in June.

There are a lot of rumours and consequential information-suppression about what is going on, but a very worrying and questionable pattern seems to be emerging with this 'use of fire.'

While interesting, the question is whether this topic is relevant for Canada Health Alliance and if it has a bearing on health and healthcare. I believe it does because as with all tactics employed in this 'Fifth Generation Warfare' battlefield we find ourselves in, fire is deadly and causes horrific injuries. It is also a primal fear that quite justifiably terrifies us, and as such can have a huge impact on our mental and psychological wellbeing.

But are we dealing with a coincidental rash of out of control wildfires, or is there something more sinister going on?

Let's look at Maui first. On August 8, wildfires broke out in the western part of Maui, burning down an estimated 2,000 acres, including the historical port town of Lahaina, where most of the buildings were destroyed, including many of the homes of its 13,000 mostly indigenous residents. So far almost 120 people have been confirmed dead, but an incredible 800 others are still missing, presumed dead, many of them schoolchildren who were sent home early.

Most of these children have simply vanished. 'Hustle Bitch' covers this terrible part of the tragedy which has its own Sound of Freedom undertones in his thirty minute video which has to be one of the most compelling and well composed so far. You can watch it at https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=_dO82ocWgv4 I would recommend watching it before it is scrubbed.

Anyway, back to the fire story. It was fueled by hurricane-strength winds of 60 to 90 mph from Hurricane Dora, which passed some 500 miles south of Hawaii. As Dora was approaching, local news predicted the risk of fire would be high due to downed power lines, dry brush and low humidity. Maui residents are now suing the power company for keeping "power lines energized during forecasted high fire danger conditions".

Some people, including Maui residents, suspect a directed energy weapon was used to set Lahaina ablaze to facilitate a land grab. Residents have long resisted offers to sell their land, and private land developers are already making offers to purchase their scorched properties.

As more information comes to light there are many questionable things which exacerbated the dangerous life-threatening situation that need to be investigated.

In a blunt interview with Glen Beck, former US Congresswoman who represented Hawaii, Tulsi Gabbard, angrily questioned the fact that the public alarm system on Hawaii was not used to warn the residents and that water could not be diverted to the fires as it was 'owned' by the corporations. It turns out that not only was extra water not made available, but mains water was actually turned off while residents were fighting the blaze. Now there is also evidence coming to light that police were blocking escape routes out of the residential areas and they are now stopping independent journalists from getting in.

One of the online comments on this interview between Beck and Gabbard was a former firefighter who blatantly stated: “As a former firefighter I tell you this fire was set. Have a look at aerial pictures... the fires were set methodically, placed just right, avoiding certain celebrities’ homes. And looking at the charred dog and the damaged cars and houses, this was not an ordinary fire. This was like bursts of superheated force... and they withheld siren warnings and water - and now the land-grabbers are moving in... and there was a book published THE DAY BEFORE the fire.....hello?”

The book, whose telling title is ‘Fire and Fury: The Story of the 2023 Maui Fire and its Implications for Climate Change’ is clearly driving a one-sided agenda. This, and the timing of its publication certainly does seem to be more than suspicious, especially given the fact that it is putting all the blame for the deadly fire fully and completely on global warming and ‘climate change’.

According to Charlotte Simmons who writes for ‘We Got This Covered’, the book claims “to chronicle the events that took place from August 8 — the day the wildfires began — to August 11. This despite the book’s publication date being listed as August 10! Believe it or not, it only gets fishier from there.”

English podcaster Richard Vobes has reported that residents heard ‘a strange rumbling sound’ just before the fire erupted leading to speculation that Direct Energy Weapons (DEWs) were used to ignite the fire and direct its path through the historic town and away from the nearby celebrity estates.

As reported by Dr. Joseph Mercola on August 19, another interesting ‘coincidence’ is the fact that Maui is the home of the U.S. Air Force Research Laboratory's (AFRL) Directed Energy Directorate, described by the AFRL as the Air Force's "center of excellence for directed energy technology."

Ryan Cristian with the The Last American Vagabond reviews what we know and can prove about this fire right now (see the YouTube video below). As noted by Cristian, while suspicions about DEWs being used are routinely dismissed as "conspiracy theory," DEWs are clearly a reality, and if they exist and work, it seems fair to assume they may one day be used.

As reported by Motherboard, the Pentagon is spending $1 billion a year on DEWs such as high-energy lasers, particle beams and high-powered microwave weapons, and the Maui Directed Energy Directorate claims to have delivered the first-ever operational DEWs to the U.S. Air Force.

So, was a DEW used and timed to coincide with a hurricane to ensure the total annihilation of Lahaina? According to Maui police chief John Pelletier, the wildfire burned hot enough to melt metal, and most typical fires simply cannot reach the required temperatures to melt steel and certain other metals.

Another alternative, of course, is that the fires were intentionally set by arsonists. However the fire in Lahaina began, it clearly benefits those intent on rebuilding Maui into a "smart island" (which up to now has been firmly resisted by the local residents). What easier way to rebuild an entire town than to have it burn to the ground?

Maui residents also believe that this disaster was orchestrated to facilitate a broad land-grab by the mega-rich, whose existing properties were 'coincidentally' spared by the fire. Apparently these people, including the likes of Oprah Winfrey and Mark Zuckerberg are now buying up the prime beach-front land at a fraction of the cost.

On this point in her August 12, 2023 LinkedIn post, Dr. Kathy J. Forti, a clinical psychologist who lives on Maui stated: "All over the island tracts of land are being bought up by corporations and no one knows who is behind them. Foreign interests? The people on this island are beginning to put the pieces of the puzzle together and suspect this was a major power land grab."

This sounds awfully reminiscent of Antifa's burning and looting of the downtown shopping areas of so many American cities in 2019 and 2020. It seems that the usual suspects are benefiting from the suffering of 'the masses' once again.

And what of the Canadian fires. Are they also being triggered for political gain, power and profit?

Many Albertans believe that the fires that suddenly ignited across their province in the last few weeks before the bitterly contested provincial election in May this year were set to discredit and distract Danielle Smith from winning the election. Smith has subsequently conducted an in-depth investigation into them.

The conclusion of these investigations has found that of the six hundred and fifty or so fires that were burning in May, more than five hundred were caused either intentionally or accidentally by humans and not 'climate change' as Trudeau has repeatedly claimed to be the cause through the mainstream media.

In Alberta numerous people have been arrested for arson, many of whom were not from Alberta and were posing as volunteer firefighters carrying out 'controlled back-burns.' This excuse has been so overused that 'Burn Back Better' memes are now doing the rounds on social media as people start joining the dots.

It also seems that coordinated arson was the cause of the outbreak of numerous fires across Quebec in early June. The earthquake watch service Dutchsense which continually monitors satellite imagery, alerted the world to the fact that on June 8 multiple locations in southern Quebec simultaneously erupted into flames.

They concluded that this could have only been possible either with coordinated province wide arson or (and they only hinted at this) the application of Direct Energy Weapons (DEWs). When writing about this in his substack 'The Reese Report,' Greg Reese concluded that the "evidence suggests that militant level arson is responsible."

According to Dane Wigington of GeoengineeringWatch.org in his shocking 17 minute video 'Wildfires as a weapon', "the military industrial complex is now insane enough to incinerate Earth's last remaining forests in order to achieve the objectives of their global controllers." A classified secret US military document entitled "Forest Fire As A Military Weapon" (see the above graphic) is a truly shocking exposé of how they have been planning this 'scorched Earth' policy of destruction going right back to the 1970's.

According to the military manual, to serve as fuel, all living vegetation on the ground level must be killed by a desiccation treatment. Wigington asks incredulously, if it is just an amazing coincidence that moisture levels in forests are now at record low levels in countless regions all over the world causing them to be incinerated at record intensity.

This priming of forest vegetation with drying and flammable chemicals apparently is being done via chemtrails dispersed by high level commercial aircraft. According to Wigington, who has been investigating this for decades, these desiccants that are showered down upon forests include aluminum which also kills soils and root systems and thus forests, making them ever more flammable.

And the speed and destruction of these 'super-fires' is astonishing, as are the persistent rumours of both intentional lighting and orders that distract the firefighters from helping save homes.

According to Juscha Grunther who has been on the frontline defending her home in the Shushwap area in central British Columbia, in a widely circulated social media post; "On Tuesday Aug 15th we knew the winds were coming. The fire was approx 15km away from us. We don't know who decided to light a back burn knowing the wind forecast. They lit a 14km back burn right to our back door and never notified us. The fire department did come down the road and were there briefly. Once they deemed the fire out of control they left. The fire department abandoned us.

About 2 hours had passed when some locals came down our valley with resources and help. I was notified the fire department was sitting in a field having coffee so I went to get them. When I got there I asked them to come help us and told them the situation. One of the firemen told me they wanted to help but had orders to sit.

In the initial days after the "superfire" the locals were able to get water, gas and supplies but now there is a heavy police presence. They have the roads blocked off saying they are preventing looting. The locals are being told to return to their homes. They are not allowed to be helping at all. There are spike strips on the roads. Police blocks everywhere. There are people trying to get essential supplies in such as water, gas and food by boat. They are being turned away. Police are patrolling the roads and water. They have the gas stations blocked off.

We need the real story to get out so we can get help. We are more than equipped to help put this fire out but are being stopped. They're trying to starve us out so they can let it burn."

There are some very serious implications to this report. However it is just a social media post. It is currently being verified by independent reporters and its factual accuracy can not be guaranteed at this stage. At least two independent organizations are working on confirming the details, and as soon as we have their findings we will let you know.

There was a very insightful interview on the Shadow Davis show on Wednesday morning which seemed to corroborate the story coming out of the Shushwap. Shadow's guest being an ex-firefighter by the name of Peter Mclsaac, who had many similar stories of both orders to stand down and of restricting access and supplies to affected remote areas.

Given the level of destruction that we have seen both in Maui and across Canada over the last few weeks and how it is all being blamed on climate change to support the political narrative, it is time that we step back and consider the political and profit motivators which might better explain what is really going on. This includes things like the lucrative carbon-tax which adds a financial burden to every single Canadian household.

According to political commentator Spencer Fernando, “Dangerous Liberal-NDP gaslighting on wildfires could lead to even more damage to Canada’s economy and the weakening of our national security.” He goes on to say that “As the Liberal-NDP Pact shifts in an ever-more extreme ideological direction, they are making sure not to let any crisis go to waste. They have utilized the understandable concern over wildfires this year to push their eco-socialist agenda even more aggressively.”

Yet, for all the hype, are we really on the cusp of a ‘boiling earth’ as the climate doomsayers are all predicting? As we have seen in a previous article in this newsletter, the oceans are not actually rising, the polar icecaps are not melting at an accelerated rate and – incredibly – according to the government’s own statistics, there has actually been no trend of increasing wildfires in Canada.

In fact, there is actually a slight downward trend in the long-term yearly average.

Fernando concludes, “Thus, to use one heightened wildfire season to push radical policies (in Hawaii, California and Canada) is based upon emotional manipulation, not facts. Canadians need to fight back against this gaslighting. Our nation is being weakened by the eco-socialist agenda, and we won’t recover our strength and prosperity until that agenda is called out, challenged, and rejected.”

Our prayers are with the victims of these ‘super-fires’ and there is no doubt that their physical, emotional and economic wounds will take years, perhaps generations to heal. Yeah we should not marginalize them as ‘acts of nature’, ‘climate change’ or ‘coincidence’ without very careful consideration and investigation.

If there has indeed been a nefarious hand in controlling and leveraging these unprecedented fires, or if firefighters have indeed been ordered to ‘stand down,’ it needs to be considered criminal assault, which, for those who have died, includes murder most foul. All those responsible, throughout the chain of command, should be prosecuted to the full extent of the law, no matter who they are or how rich and powerful they, or their political and corporate 'clients,' may be.
